Atlanta-based real estate firm Patterson Real Estate Advisory Group has appointed Barry Olson to serve as senior managing director to lead expansion into Texas, according to a news release. He will be based in Coppell.

Patterson hopes to offer its commercial real estate services to current and future clients across Texas.

"Barry and I have known each other throughout the entirety of our 40-year careers, starting our first professional jobs together on the same day in Dallas in the early 1980s," Lance Patterson, founder and CEO of Patterson, said in the release. "He is recognized nationally as one of the top people in our industry, and we couldn't be happier and more

Before joining Patterson, Olson served as managing director for the real estate group of the merchant banking division at Goldman Sachs.

"One thing that has remained remarkably consistent is how Lance and his partners have been extremely focused on the company's culture," Olson said in the release. "They have built a team-oriented, client-centric company which makes the company a great fit for me, and I could not be more pleased to join."

In April, Patterson helped arrange the acquisition of Royal Tech Business Park in the Irving submarket of Las Colinas for North Carolina-based real estate firm Dilweg.
